The World Confederation for Physical Therapy (WCPT) is pleased to announce the winning entries of its first worldwide photography competition.

Photographs were submitted from around the world, showcasing the role physical therapy plays in global health. Marilyn Moffat, WCPT's President, comments: "the images demonstrate how this profession interacts with and improves its patients' lives, operating in a variety of settings and across the life span".

"We are delighted with the response we have received to this photography competition. The images have visibly shown the importance of physical therapy worldwide", says Brenda Myers, WCPT's Secretary General.

WCPT invited amateur and professional photographers to take part in its photographic contest. Outstanding images were sought from across the full range of physical therapy practice, education and research. The competition gave the opportunity to become involved in how physical therapy is globally portrayed.

The overall winner was chosen for its technical accomplishments and, as described by a member of the judging panel, "for so clearly demonstrating the complete engagement of the physical therapist at work". The photograph was taken by Muhammad Irfan in Indonesia.

The 15 winning photographs were selected from the 120 images received.
